pers Justice a Bit. Standing at the bar of the criminal court, his antebellum figure curved by the winters of seventy-one years and with his white locks glistening and with his white locks glistening in the morning sunlight which spread throughout the courtroom. Uncle Heary Smith, colored, plead guilty Monday morning to the charge of manufacturing moonshine whisky. The aged defendant, however, qualified his plea with the statement that he was just making a little for his own use during the "flu" regime throughout the country. Uncle Henry is a typical southern negro and as he stood with bowed head and his hat in his hand he created the sympathy of every one in the courtroom pathy of every one in the courtroom and Judge McReynolds and Gen. Chamles at once stated a desire to assist the old man in every way pos-sible and the stern mandate of the law in such cases is probably the only cause why the defendant was punished at all.

The defendant was represented by T. D. Fletcher, who stated at the outset that there was nothing left but to "beg and play for the mercy of the court", "We were just making a little bit for our own personal consumption and for those fellows who went out there and had the "flu", said Mr. Fletcher.
